REPLY TO OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR RECONSIDERATION

Long Island Multimedia, LLC. ("LIMM") by its undersigned counsel herewith submits its reply to the Opposition to Petition for Reconsideration, filed by Aspen FM, Inc., Calipatria Broadcasting Company, LLC, Rancho Palos Verdes Broadcasters, Inc. and Entravision Holdings, LLC (collectively the "Opposing Parties") on February 22, 1999, as follows:

1. LIMM argued in its Petition that the "tolling" provisions recently adopted by the Commission in its Report and Order (FCC 98-281) in MM Docket No. 98-43 and MM Docket No. 94-149, released November 25, 1998, 63 FR 70039 (December 18, 1998), were impermissibly vague and provided too much opportunity for manipulation and unwarranted abuse. LIMM contended that the tolling provisions should be revised to apply only where construction is precluded by circumstances which are clearly beyond the control of the permitee and where the permitee has acted with diligence. LIMM also argued that the retroactive application of the newly adopted tolling provisions to outstanding permits would unduly reward lack of diligence by according permitees a longer construction period than they could have expected under the prior rule and that such application was impermissibly retroactive under applicable precedent.

- 2. The Opposing Parties oppose LIMM's Petition on the grounds that (a) the tolling provisions should be liberalized and (b) that the same precedent which precludes the retroactive application of the tolling provisions also precludes the retroactive application of the new rules to outstanding permits. In support of their first argument, the Opposing Parties submit anecdotal evidence intended to bolster their claim that the tolling provisions should be liberalized. However, the evidence presented actually supports LIMM's position. In each instance the evidence offered by the Opposing Parties merely serves to emphasize the fact that the tolling provisions have been disconnected from the critical touchstone: the permitee's control or lack of control over the circumstances precluding construction. Although LIMM has insufficient knowledge of the facts of the cases cited by the Opposing Parties to offer any definitive analysis, it would appear from the Opposing Parties' account that each of these cases involve circumstances beyond the control of the permitee, which would have warranted an extension under the prior rule, provided the permitee had acted with diligence.
- 3. Reduced to their essence, the arguments of LIMM and the Opposing Parties focus upon different aspects of the same issue. In arguing that the tolling provisions are too lax, LIMM's essential concern is that they would permit tolling under circumstances which are within the permitee's control and, thus, give rise to manipulation and abuse and otherwise disserve the public interest. In arguing that they are too strict, the Opposing Parties contend that the tolling provisions would fail to apply even to circumstances that cleary are beyond control their control, unless those circumstances fall squarely within the limited categories identified by the Commission. __/ Both parties have valid concerns and the deficiencies identified by each arise from the same problem: the Commission's failure to assure any meaningful connection between the tolling provisions and the permitee's control over the circumstances precluding construction. As such, the tolling provisions fail to protect the interests that were served by the third prong of the former "one in three" rule, i.e., assuring that the circumstances precluding construction be clearly beyond the control of the permitee and that the permitee have acted with diligence in taking all reasonable steps to remove the impediment.

<sup>1.</sup> By law the Commission is precluded from canceling a permit where the failure to construct is due to circumstances beyond the permitee's control and, thus, the tolling provisions lawfully could not be applied in the manner described by the Opposing Parties. See: 47 USC 319(b).

- 4. Were the Commission to revise the tolling provisions to make tolling dependent upon a showing consistent with the criteria required to be met under the old rule, i.e., lack of control and diligence, the problems identified by both LIMM and the Opposing Parties would be eliminated. Accordingly, the tolling provisions should be revised to apply where: (a) construction is precluded by circumstances which are demonstrated to be clearly beyond the control of the permitee and (b) the permittee can demonstrate that it has acted with diligence and taken all reasonable steps possible to overcome the impediment.
- 5. With regard to the Opposing Parties' second argument, there appears to be merit to the Opposing Parties' contention that any application of the new rules to outstanding permits is impermissibly retroactive. Furthermore, a decision by the Commission on reconsideration not to apply the new rules retroactively to outstanding permits would eliminate LIMM's concerns regarding retroactive application of the new tolling provisions, as well as addressing the legitimate concerns of the Opposing Parties.
- 6. The primary focus of LIMM's Petition, however, is with the newly adopted tolling provisions and the need to assure that they are predicated upon a showing of circumstances beyond the permitee's control and due diligence on its part, regardless of whether they are prospectively or retroactively applied. In the absence of such limitations, the newly adopted tolling provisions cannot be applied consistent with the public interest, whether prospectively or retroactively.
